

It seems, of the many regulations Federal government creates on a daily basis, this one would do more for the common good than most. The infrastructure and equipment that most of the cellular companies are working on today are in multi-generation. Upgrades in frequency management obtained in both software and hardware upgrades have been done by all that are still in business. This functionality could have been built into any of the many upgrades that have taken place since this requirement was established. To forstall this requirement once again makes a sham of the need for regulatory entities.
